

Rick Herrmann, Distinguished Professor of Political Science; Director, Mershon Center, introduces Sean Kay for his talk at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies.

Sean Kay spoke to over 20 people at the Mershon Center on Wednesday, May 25, 2011 at noon. The title of his talk was, "Ontological Security and Locating Danger in Peace-Building: The Case of Northern Ireland".

Peter Mansoor, Raymond E. Mason Jr. Chair in Military History asks Sean Kay a question during his presentation.

Sean Kay spoke to the Mershon Center at the end of Spring Quarter 2011. Kay discussed parts of his forthcoming book, Celtic Revival?: The Rise, Fall, and Renewal of Global Ireland (Rowman & Littlefield).

Sean Kay is professor in the Department of Politics and Government and chair of the International Studies Program at Ohio Wesleyan University, specializing in international politics, international security, international organizations, and U.S. foreign and defense policy. He is also Mershon associate at the Mershon Center for International Security Studies and a non-resident fellow at the Eisenhower Institute in Washington, D.C., specializing in international security.